

The Ophtalmologist

Do I need glasses?

The ophthalmologist checks that my eyes move correctly

The ophthalmologist shows me an object.

- I watch the object carefully.

- I must not move my head.

- The ophthalmologist can hold my head still to help me.

- The ophthalmologist moves the object around in front of my eyes in all directions.

- I have to follow the object with my eyes.

The ophthalmologist shows me a small light.

● I look carefully at the light.

- The ophthalmologist covers one of my eyes with an object.
I follow the small light with my eye without moving my head.

- The ophthalmologist does the same for my other eye.

The ophthalmologist checks I can see things far away.

The ophthalmologist shows me some letters or pictures.

- The letters or pictures get smaller and smaller.

The ophthalmologist covers one of my eyes.

- I have to say what I can see, even if it is very small.

- If I can't talk, I can sign it or draw it on a board.

- The ophthalmologist does the same for my other eye.

The ophthalmologist checks if I can see up close.

The ophthalmologist gives me a small board with letters or pictures.

The ophthalmologist shines a strong light on the board.

The ophthalmologist covers one of my eyes.

- I must say what I can see, even if it is very small.

- The ophthalmologist does the same for my other eye.

The ophthalmologist looks at my eyes with a machine.

Sometimes the machine:

- is on the table.

- Sometimes it is portable.

I always sit the same way for every kind of machine:

- I lean forward.
- I rest my chin on the machine.
- I press my forehead gently against the machine.
- I look straight in front of me.

- The person who accompanies me can help me.

- I must keep my head still.

- I look straight ahead.

I can see a light in the machine. I keep my eyes wide open.

The machine measures my eyes.

- These measurements tell if I need glasses.

If I need glasses, the ophthalmologist tries different lenses.

The ophthalmologist puts some funny looking glasses on me.

● He opens a box of lenses.

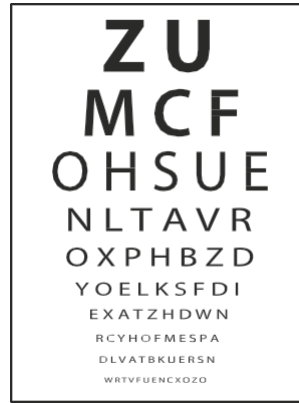

- He tries different lenses in the funny looking glasses.

- I look at the pictures or letters.

- I have to say when I can see better.

The ophthalmologist writes me a prescription for glasses.

I can go and choose some nice glasses at the optician's store.
